NOW, STURT MAKES IT A 3-WAY FIGHT

Bays crash in tough last term

By

ALAN SHIEL

Sturt 15-19, Glenelg 13-20

Sturt, winner of seven of its past nine matches, deserves total respect in the struggle for this year's premiership.

In climbing into third position, Jack Oatey's Blues have rocked the theory that the 1980 title is strictly a two-way fight between Port Adelaide and Glenelg.

The Tigers had their pride wounded at Unley yesterday, just a week after being convincing winners against Port in a match that was billed as a preview of the grand final.

Oatey's preparation for Glenelg (and John Halbert) probably was more intense than for any game Sturt has played this season.

No doubt

The old master cracked his whip with telling effect at training in the past week and his players were left in no doubt about the importance of beating Glenelg.

The air was charged with tension and expectation in Sturt's dressing room before the game, although that's second-hand knowledge because no outsiders were allowed in or near the place.

Glenelg may have experienced some let-down from the Port match. Players were not always as hungry for the ball as they were against the Magpies, nor did they use it with the same precision.

But Sturt must take much of the credit for that. It was, as Halbert said later, "too good on the day."

Yet Glenelg appeared slightly the better side in the first three quarters (it led at each break) and, statistically, it was superior—219 kicks, 151 hand-passes, and 91 marks—compared with Sturt's 194, 96, and 51.

Both teams wasted many opportunities with untidy kicking for goal and Sturt had reason to believe it served by captain Paul Weston, whose astonishing work-rate at centre and across half-forward was illustrated by his statistics—23 kicks, 18 hand-passes, and 13 marks.

Kym Hodgeman roved brilliantly at times, Graham Cornes was a busy follower, Stephen Coppings was always dangerous, mostly at half-forward, and Jim Lihou was consistently effective in the back pocket.

Sturt captain Paul Bagshaw's slight knee problem kept him out again and centreman Brendon Howard did not resume after quarter-time because of back trouble.

It was a critical loss for Glenelg, which now seems destined to meet Sturt again in the qualifying final instead of finishing minor premier and having a rest on the first weekend of the finals.

LEFT: Sturt ruckman Rick Davies goaled after this fine mark behind Glenelg full back Keith Kuhlmann in the third quarter at Unley yesterday
