WARREN PARTLAND

THE drought has finally broken for Glenelg. After 12 successive losses, the Tigers sang their song in glory yesterday after conquering North Adelaide by 67 points at Prospect.

This was an emphatic performance which has given the Tigers tremendous hope of avoiding the wooden spoon and one which could just save the job of coach Kris Massie.

The Tigers are just a game behind eight-placed South Adelaide with two rounds remaining and the Panthers, who have inferior percentage, have just one match left.

As for the Roosters, their season is imploding. They have lost their past four games to slip to fourth on the ladder and are now facing an uphill battle to retrieve a top-three spot and the double-chance in the finals.

But on yesterday's lacklustre performance, the Roosters are destined to have little impact in the major round. They were devoid of passion and spirit, struggled with the basic skills and were far too lazy. Roosters coach Josh Franco said it best when claiming the effort was so unacceptable and embarrassing.

In contrast, the manner in which the Tigers attacked the contest failed to reflect a side which had not won since round five. They took full advantage of a Roosters outfit low on confidence and full of players acting as spectators hoping a team-mate would do the hard yards. "I'm really pleased for the group," Massie said. "The players have copped a fair bit of criticism."

"The results have not been there but the way the group has continually put in at training is a testament to the group. I sense they are building something special - I sense it is not just a one or two week thing."

"The reason I say that is because it has been five or six weeks at training where we have often commented this group does not look like a group which has had 11 or 12 losses in a row, or eight or nine."

After a competitive, albeit mistake-riddled, first quarter, the Tigers punished the Roosters for their poor skills and shoddy entries into their attacking 50m to go on the rampage and bag eight goals without an answer. The work started down back through the likes of Warrick McGinty and Shaun Tapp, who outpointed their rivals and then ran the ball from defence with ease to set up attacking raids.

The Tigers' movement often confronted little opposition and as the game lengthened so too did their confidence grow. There were 11 goalkickers for the Tigers and every player grabbed double-figure disposals - glaring evidence of a terrific team performance.
